

I am appalled that the FCC would consider weakening New Jersey's protections against obnoxious telemarketing. This is not simply a "quality of life" issue. I've had my privacy invaded by telemarketers at some of the most stressful moments of my life. After all, how does a telemarketer know not to disturb me because I am recovering from surgery, suffering the effects of chemotherapy or mourning over a serious injury to one of my children? How dare the FCC even consider weakening protections against such intrusive behavior--all in the name of protecting "business". Shame on you!
